THE CITY OF PARIS. [From Mr. Fulton's Letters.] THE PARIS BUTCHERS.

No slaughter house is allowed within the preeincts of Paris, and even live poultry is not permitted within the city limits. Everything brought to market must be dead; hence the people are not annoyed by droves of cattle, sheep and hogs, as we of Baltimore are, nor are there any foul smells from slaughter houses. There are no general meat markets in Paris. all meat being sold from stores, which are scattered all over the city. The butchers' stores are among the most attractive establishments in the city, and many of them are fitted up with great elegance, regardless of cost. There is one on the corner of Boulevard Haussmann and Rue Auber, which fronts about sixty feet on each street, and is a most beautiful sight. ornamented with fountains and flowers, and even the walls, as well as the tables, of pure white marble. There is probably no store of any kind in the city which has been fitted up in so costly a manner as this establishment, nor which presents a more elegant appearance from the street. The salesmen are all arrayed in pure white, and a cashier sits behind a very ornamental desk to receive the money from the purchasers. All kinds of meat are for sale here-beef, pork, lamb and mutton, and are all dressed and arrayed in the most attractive manner; the legs of mutton being done up like bouquets, in lace paper. The sight of this meat store is calculated to sharpen a man's appetite-everything being sweet and clean about it. The smaller stores are all fitted up in the same style, and during the warm weather have handsome curtains hung in front to keep out in any part of the city. The meat is required

These establishments are located on the suburbs of the city, the buildings of which cover sixty-seven acres of land near the fortifications. between the Canals de l'Ourcy and St. Denis. The slaughtering of cattle of all descriptions is required by law to be done here, the average per week being two thousand beeves, eight hundred cows, a thousand calves, and ten thousand sheep. There are, also, a good number of horses slaughtered, their meat being sold to the poor, it having been found during the siege to be quite palatable. Wornout horses are fattened and sold to the butchers, the supply from the carriage and omnibus stalls being very

The principal entrance to these extensive slaugher houses is by the Rue de Flandre. It is enclosed by an elegant iron railing with eleven gates for entrance and exit, and its numerous buildings give it the appearance of an enclosed town. There are now sixty-four pavilions in active operation, some of which are reserved for stalls, in which the cattle awaiting their doom are kept. The others are divided into one hundred and twenty three places of slaughter, called "echandoirs." The cleanliness which prevails throughout is admirable. Every echandoir is provided with abundance of water, and the stone floor is scrnpulously scoured every time an animal has been killed, and the foul water runs off into sewers intersecting the grounds in every direction. The ventilation is also excellent, so that, even at this season of the year, there are no foul smells about this extensive establishment. At the entrance to each there is a strong iron ring immovably fixed in the ground. Through this ring the rope is made to pass which has previously been secured to the horns of the animal to be slaughtered. The rope is then drawn tight by means of a pulley, and when the victim's head has been forced down as much as possible, it receives thin death-blow with a heavy club. There are also on the premises buildings called triperies. where tripe and calves feet are washed and boiled, melting houses for tallow, with attics for drying skins, lofts for fodder, &c. Cattle and sheep are kept here at the butcher's exbense. The slaughter men get from 1 franc 10 12 francs for each animal, beside the entrails, brains and blood. The number of butcher shops in the metropolis, which are daily supplied from the abbattoir, is 869, wich will give some idea of the number scattered over the city.

From an official inquiry set on foot by the Chamber of commerce of Paris, it appears that there are employed in the various trades and manufactories, 467,311 hands of whom about 300,000 are men, 120,000 women, and 47,000 children. Of these there are 60,000 males, earning from 50 centimes (10 cents) to 3 francs (cents) per day; 211,000 earn from 31 to 6 francs (65 cents to $1.20) per day, and 15,000 from 62 to 20 francs ($1 30 to $4). Of the females, 17,200 earn from 50 centimes (10 cents) to I frame 25 centimes to 4 frames (25 to 80 cents); and 700 from 4½ to 10 francs (90 cents to $2.) The wages of children are from 10 cents to 25 cents per day. The shoemakers, earpenters, bricklayers, stonemasons and painlers are among the 211,000 who receive from 65 cents to $1.20 per day. It is not to be wondered that these mechanics come to the United States whenever they can raise money enough to pay their passages. Our mechanics at home, by restricting their own sons in the trivilege of learning trades, always keep the supshort so as to provide places for the foreign dechanic whenever he is ready to come. They al deserve leather medals for their philanthro-

PARIS LOCAL ITEMS. The draught horses of Paris are almost equal in size and muscle to those of Liverpool. The carts and vehicles are ponderous and broadwheeled, being when empty a sufficient load for an ordinary horse. The coal carts hold three tons, and are drawn by three horses tandem. The streets are so well paved that hey move along with apparent ease. These heavy carts are generally kept off the streets covered with asphaltum, which would scarcely stand the weight. The ice cream sold at the Paris cafes is very way to the American article. Indeed, it SODA WATER at WARFIELD & HALL'S.

> We yesterday lost the key of a trunk, sent to a locksmith, who came to our room, opened the trunk by taking the hasp off, carried the trunk away to his shop, mended it, made a GREEN'S NOTION HOUSE, new key, and brought it back, and his whole charge was a franc and a half, or about thirty cents. This man was certainly very dishonest towards himself. He had also secured with new brass nails two hasps that were loose on the corners of the trunk. The dwellings of Paris seldom have any yards the houses covering the entire lots. The open courts in the centre for light and air are generally not more than ten feet by six. Some of the larger houses have courtyards in the centre with a carriage way to drive in, but they are no larger than is necessary for light and ventilation to the windows in the high walls, which surround them on all sides. The entire washing and ironing for the better class of people is done at the laundries, which are very numerous. They gather up the clothing with their wagons, and deliver them when finished. "Baltimore Pearl Hominy Mills" met our vision the other day whilst passing a grocery store. We found a pile of small bags of hominy with this striking label on them. It is quite common to see labels of "Cincinnati hams, but it is not often that we meet with anything in Faris direct from Baltimore, especially in the provision line, and about the last thing we expected to see here was "Pearl hominy."

AMERICANS IN PARIS.

The people of Paris have astounded at the American invasion. They are not only filled up ail the hotels, but the boarding houses on Boulevard Hausemann are thronged with them. Those who come to stay over a month or two invariably abandon the hotels and take to the boarding houses, where they can live much more comfortably and fare hetter for half the expense. The charge at these houses ranges from eight to twelve francs per day, including finely furnished chambers and the use of the parlors, pianos, &c., with wine at dejeuner and dinner. Many American families are located here permanently, finding the cost of living much cheaper than at home. For three chambers and a private parlor at Madam Feron's, No. 111 Rue Neuve des Matturine, we pay thirty-six francs per day, which embraces everything, including the very pleasant American company which is usually to be found at the flies. There are poultry markets, where vegetables are also sold, but no meat markets tendance excellent, and we have no doubt that and make a note of the quantity, quality and for a prolonged stay much lower rates could be price. to be brought into the shops from the abat- obtained. The papers are filled with advertisetoirs before 4 o'clock in the morning, and the ments of rooms and apartments to be let to Americans, and every one, even the servants, are finding the importance of speaking Engwear at the abattoirs. These stores sell nothing but meat, and are carried on by the butching with English-speaking clerks. Colored nurses with American children in charge are quite common all over Paris, and the American citizen of African descent walks up and down the boulevards with his yellow kids and ivoryheaded whalebone under his arm without being any longer an object of curiosity.-American dress makers are invading the precincts of the famous Worth, and have their establishments on Rue Seville and Boulevard Houseman thronged with customers. The American Club room, the American cafe, and a number of fancy goods establishments have been recently started by Americans, and four tain a stock of goods that will do credit to Alex-American newspapers are published in Paris. The American flag is to be seen in various sections of the city, and the carriage drivers as well as the store-keepers are reaping a rich harvest. The number of American ladies here is unprecedented, and there is no city in Europe in which they love to linger as they do in Paris. They all want to stay until the equinoctial storm is over, never admitting that the desire for delay is to give time to the dress makers to provide them with a more elaborate toilet. We heard an old widower, with a young and blooming wife, as he scanned a three thous-
